

Manifesto: declaration publicly of the intentions, motives, or views

Food is the basis for life and civilization. Cities emerged from farms, and a power higher arching emerged from that. Now, large multinational conglomerates run the world like Bayer AG and Nestlé have dominated the production process from seed to store. With that, it's slow and progressive and has almost seemed like nothing happened to the consumer, that is. All produce is made to look "fresh" and perfect, but that's not what natural production is like.

Our food system is wasteful and false. Any small imperfection, size, is too small, mishaped, maybe—it goes in the trash. Anything to say we're the best and everyone else is untrustworthy because theirs is a little odd-shaped. Initiatives have tried to combat this by buying and reselling the "imperfect" crop from farmers, but that's only scratching the surface of the problem. The problem is starting at the farmer. The force to produce the cheapest, biggest, most perfect-looking crop is so high that they have done about anything, no matter what, to get that profit margin astronomical, like in the case of 2,4-D—a pesticide known to cause acute toxicity, cancer risk, fertility problems, amongst other problems.

Along with that, battles with multiple people after the development of cancer from contamination of Monsanto's product Roundup, with allegedly falsified private studies that found Roundup to be safe - though multiple public studies have been done rebutting private studies - though many stopped after a donation to the department responsible from Monsanto was given... And Monsanto's product Roundup is still on shelves... Which brings us to our objective: use natural methods to farm. And educate people on what they have consumed and what they should "consume."

Nature has survived and adapted for 1000s of years naturally. And those relationships have been ignored, though it's the solution to every problem. Everything has an equal and opposite reaction; this will balance out. This is our goal to educate people on precisely this.

- Educate People on tradition and culture
- Practice Tradition and Culture
- Connect Tradition and Culture

We Reject Modern "Farming" and embrace the traditional farming to protest and protect ourselves against what we are lied to about.
